

Contributors

Jonathan Chilcote is an assistant professor of history at Florida College, where he teaches courses in American history and Western Civilization. He earned his Ph.D. at the University of Kentucky, specializing in U.S. foreign relations, transnational history, and pandemics. He has won several fellowships and grants, including from the Society for Historians of American Foreign Relations. His research centers on the ways in which global health issues affect American policies and perceptions of the world. At the moment, he is working on projects examining the legacy of the Spanish Influenza pandemic and the United States' participation in the League of Nations' public health initiatives.

Ian J. Drake is an associate professor of political science and law at Montclair State University in New Jersey. He holds a Ph.D. in American history from the University of Maryland and is an attorney who formerly practiced in the areas of tort and insurance law. His research interests include American legal and political history and the history of animal rights laws and politics in America.

Christopher Holmes currently serves as a contract historian with the Joint History and Research Office on the Joint Staff at the Pentagon. He grew up in Massachusetts and commissioned into the U.S. Air Force after college ROTC. Before retiring as a colonel, his assignments included teaching at Air Command and Staff College, commanding both a logistics readiness squadron and a mission support group, and serving on the Joint Staff. He earned a bachelor's degree in history from Tufts University and a Master of Arts degree in military history from Norwich University. He also holds master's degrees from Embry-Riddle Aeronautical University, Air Command and Staff College, and the Dwight D. Eisenhower School for National Security & Resource Strategy.

Alan Jaroslovsky graduated from the University of California, Los Angeles in 1970 and was then commissioned as a naval officer, serving on destroyers for three years, including a seven-month combat deployment to Vietnam in 1972. He attended law school after release from the service, and was hired as an intern by the Ford White House and assigned as a staff attorney to the Presidential Clemency Board. He graduated in 1977 and practiced law for 10 years until his appointment as a U.S. bankruptcy judge. Jaroslovsky retired from the judiciary in 2017 and earned a master's degree in U.S. history from Sonoma State University in 2019. He currently lives in Santa Rosa, California.

Benjamin Lyons is a recent graduate of the Ph.D. program in early American history at Columbia University, specializing in the legal, diplomatic, and intellectual history of the revolutionary era. He has received fellowships from the Huntington Library, the Rockefeller Library at Colonial Williamsburg, and the Fred W. Smith Library at Mount Vernon, as well as scholarships from, among others, the Colonial Dames of America. He has held teaching positions at Columbia University and is the author of a forthcoming article in the Journal of the Early Republic on John Jay's role in the negotiation of the Treaty of Paris. He is preparing to write an intellectual biography of Jay, establishing his significance to the founding of the United States.

Chandra Manning teaches U.S. history at Georgetown University. A former National Park Service Ranger, she has also advised historical sites, museums, and community groups. Her first book, What This Cruel War Was Over: Soldiers, Slavery, and the Civil War (Knopf, 2007), won the Avery O. Craven Prize awarded by the Organization of American Historians and Honorable Mention for the Lincoln Prize. Her most recent book, Troubled Refuge: Struggling for Freedom in the Civil War (Knopf, 2016) won the Jefferson Davis Prize awarded by the American Civil War Museum for best book on the Civil War. Eventually, she intends to write something that would qualify for a prize not named for a dead Civil War president.

Bill Williams served as chief of the Center for Cryptologic History (CCH) at the National Security Agency (NSA), Fort Meade, Maryland, from October 2002 through October 2016, when he retired from government service. He is currently serving as a part-time consultant to CCH as a member of NSA's Standby Active Reserves. He was an officer in the United States Air Force for 30 years, primarily as an intelligence analyst, and he retired in October 2005 as a colonel. He joined the Society for History in the Federal Government after attending SHFG's Holiday Party at the National Archives in 2002, and has been a member ever since. He served on the Society's Executive Council in 2003–2004, and as SHFG's president in 2007–2008.

Kevin Yuill is associate professor of American history at the University of Sunderland, UK. He is author of Richard Nixon and Affirmative Action: The Pursuit of Racial Equality in an Era of Limits (2006), Assisted Suicide: The Liberal, Humanist Case Against Legalization (2013), and co-author of The Second Amendment and Gun Control: Freedom, Fear and the American Constitution (2017). Besides publishing a number of journal articles, he has published in The Economist, Spectator, and elsewhere. A former Fulbright Scholar, his broad interests are in the relation of the citizen to the state and how changes in this relationship manifest themselves in 20th- and 21st-century American history.